

Abstract

30-year reunions are perhaps good times to talk not only about our own work, but also to take a step back and look at the broader picture. I will attempt to do that, reflecting on how computer science helps us understand ourselves and the world, from language, intelligence, biology, politics, and other things I know nothing about. I will also try to talk a bit about my own field, the science of software.